Osterwald, John O. Maberry, C. Richard Dunrud, Geological Survey (U.S.), 1981 Description of the geologic setting and economic potential of an east central Utah coal mining district Carbon Captured Matto Mildenerberger, 2020-02-18 A comparative examination of domestic climate politics that offers a theory for cross national differences in domestic climate policymaking Climate change threatens the planet and yet policy responses have varied widely across nations Some countries have undertaken ambitious programs to stave off climate disaster others have done little and still others have passed policies that were later rolled back In this book Matto Mildenerberger opens the black box of domestic climate politics examining policy making trajectories in several countries and offering a theoretical explanation for national differences in the climate policy process Mildenerberger introduces the concept of double representation when carbon polluters enjoy political representation on both the left through industrial unions fearful of job loss and the right through industrial business associations fighting policy costs and argues that different climate policy approaches can be explained by the interaction of climate policy preferences and domestic institutions He illustrates his theory with detailed histories of climate politics in Norway the United States and Australia along with briefer discussions of policies in Germany Japan the United Kingdom and Canada He shows that Norway systematically shielded politically connected industrial polluters from costs beginning with its pioneering carbon tax the United States after the failure of carbon reduction legislation finally acted on climate reform through a series of Obama administration executive actions and Australia's Labor and Green parties enacted an emissions trading scheme which was subsequently repealed by a conservative Liberal party government Ultimately Mildenerberger argues for the importance of political considerations in understanding the climate policymaking process and discusses possible future policy
