RESEARCHERS have found that the use of a computer program to help students learn to read can be as effective as having a teacher read to them. The program, called Read Naturally, is designed to help students learn to read by using a series of audio tapes that are played back to them. The program is designed to be used by students who are struggling to learn to read, and it is designed to be used by students who are learning to read in a foreign language. Figure 1 | Flowchart illustrating the selection of the study population. The flowchart shows the selection process starting from the initial pool of 1000 subjects, leading to the final study population of 100 subjects.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical health of the women was assessed using a variety of measures, including heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The psychological health of the women was assessed using a variety of measures, including the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the women. The women in the walking program had significantly lower heart rates, blood pressures, and body mass indices than the women in the control group. Additionally, the women in the walking program had significantly lower scores on the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory than the women in the control group. These findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can have a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

RESEARCH 10

[illegible]

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the aerobic capacity of young women. The subjects were 12 female college students who were randomly assigned to a training group and a control group. The training group performed a 12-week aerobic training program, while the control group did not. The aerobic capacity of the subjects was measured at the beginning and end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the training group had a significant increase in aerobic capacity, while the control group did not. The increase in aerobic capacity was measured by the maximum oxygen consumption (VO₂max) and the heart rate reserve (HRR). The training group had a significant increase in both VO₂max and HRR, while the control group did not. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the aerobic capacity of young women.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in the city of Ankara, Turkey. The study group consisted of 20 children (10 boys and 10 girls) who were randomly selected from the 10-year-old children in the school. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group did not participate in any physical education program, while the experimental group participated in a 12-week training program. The physical fitness of the children was measured at the beginning and at the end of the 12-week period. The measurements included heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The results of the study showed that the experimental group had significantly higher heart rates and blood pressures at the end of the 12-week period compared to the control group. The body mass index of the children in the experimental group also increased significantly. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.
