The Alliance Reid Hoffman, Ben Casnocha, Chris Yeh, 2014 For most of the 20th century the relationship between employers and employees in the developed world was all about stability and lifetime loyalty That has recently changed giving way to a transactional laissez faire approach that serves neither party well A new arrangement is needed the authors argue one built on alliance usually temporary and reciprocity The high tech start up community of Silicon Valley is pointing the way and companies that wish to be similarly agile and entrepreneurial can learn valuable lessons from its example Under the new compact both employer and employee seek to add value to each other Employees invest in the company s adaptability the company invests in employees employability Hoffman a cofounder of LinkedIn Casnocha a technology entrepreneur and Yeh an entrepreneur and angel investor outline three simple straightforward ways in which companies can make the new compact tangible and workable These are 1 hiring employees for explicit tours of duty 2 encouraging even subsidizing employees efforts to build networks outside the organization and 3 establishing active alumni networks that will enable career long relationships with employees after they ve moved on In the war for talent such a compact can be a secret weapon that helps you fill your ranks with the creative adaptive superstars who fuel entrepreneurial success
