Volumes of Solids of Revolution / Method of Cylinders

In the previous section we started looking at finding volumes of solids of revolution. In that section we took cross sections that were rings or disks, found the cross-sectional area and then used the following formulas to find the volume of the solid.

$$V = \int_a^b A(x) dx$$

$$V = \int_c^d A(y) dy$$

In the previous section we only used cross sections that were in the shape of a disk or a ring. This however does not always need to be the case. We can use any shape for the cross sections as long as it can be expanded or contracted to completely cover the solid we're looking at. This is a good thing because as our first example will show us we can't always use rings/disks.

Example 1 Determine the volume of the solid obtained by rotating the region bounded by $y = (x-1)(x-3)^2$ and the x -axis about the y -axis.

Solution

As we did in the previous section, let's first graph the bounded region and solid. Note that the bounded region here is the shaded portion shown. The curve is extended out a little past this for the purposes of illustrating what the curve looks like.

So, we've basically got something that's roughly doughnut shaped. If we were to use rings on this solid here is what a typical ring would look like.
