(Historian)

"Agriculture can drain the land of nutrients, often through soil salinization. An inundation can be harnessed by both canals and river splays to replenish fertility of the land and water crops. It also may replenish a low water table for well-orientated civilization such as the Assyrians. All of these crops being aided are used directly as food in and in secondary goods, such as textiles, to fuel the economy and prosperity of the culture."
