

AXIAL SKELETON

The axial skeleton consists of the skull, the vertebral column, the sternum, and the thorax or rib cage and serves to hold the body erect. It also protects most of the body's vital organs such as the heart, lungs, and liver, which the thorax encloses. The thorax is a bony and somewhat flexible cage made up of twelve pairs of thin, curved ribs, the head of each of which joins or articulates with one or two vertebrae. The first seven pairs of ribs, the "true" ribs, are directly attached to the sternum by a strip of costal cartilage. The other five pairs, the "false" ribs, consist of the eighth, ninth, and tenth pairs, which are attached to each other and the seventh pair by cartilage, and the "floating" ribs (pairs eleven and twelve), which are not tied to the sternum at all but to the muscles of the abdominal wall. The elasticity of the cartilage and the flexible joints at the spine allow the ribs to flex in and out, reducing or enlarging the volume of the thorax.

The sternum develops in the child as three separate bones, but the three fuse into one in the adult around age 25. Pushing down on the lower third of the sternum compresses the heart and creates a pumping action that is the basis of cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

Wider, smoother, and more bowl-like than the male's in order to accommodate the fetus during pregnancy and childbirth, the female pelvis is also smaller and structurally weaker than the male's. The pubic angle is greater than 90°.

SACRUM AND PELVIS

The sacrum forms a strong, interlocking keystone for the pelvis, which is subject to more stress than any other structure in the body.
