About this manual

The manual is intended as a guide when fault tracing the engine.

The section under the heading Malfunction is built up in such a way that given certain conditions, it is possible to systematically search for the probable cause of the fault.

It is very important to follow the fault tracing procedures systematically for two reasons, firstly to eliminate the risk of replacing non-defective parts, and secondly, to avoid time-consuming work which might otherwise be involved in checking the same things twice.

The manual also refers to the expression VCADS (Volvo Computer Aided Diagnostic System), which is a reference to the Volvo data based program for diagnosis and fault tracing.

The section under the heading Service Procedures details how the equipment for exhaust gas temperature measurement is to be fitted.

Concerning specifications and service procedures which may be applicable in conjunction with fault tracing work, refer to the respective service manuals for D12A as follows:

Specifications, Group 20.

Service Procedures, engine, Groups 21-26.

Service Procedures, electrical system, Group 3.
