The Murder of Bessie Sheppard David Marshall,2015-01-04 In 1817 a young girl of no importance called Elizabeth Sheppard was murdered in Mansfield An ex soldier called Charles Rotherham who had fought against Napoleon was hanged for the crime then history forgot about them both yet the town erected a monument to this insignificant girl not at her graveside but at the site of her murder Her grave remains unmarked Her monument though includes details of the man hanged for the crime The author re investigated the murder using contemporary records and reconstructions and concludes that the hanged man could well have been innocent No one ever spoke up on his behalf nor was any defence ever presented until the author chose to do so himself Elizabeth was forgotten No descendants would cherish her memory The author wanted to rectify this and pass the girl on to a family a family that prior to his investigation was unknown and lived many thousands of miles away If the hanged man was innocent was it possible from the scant records available to discover what might really have happened in that insignificant Regency town two hundred years ago Was it possible this late to identify the real culprit *The Murder of Bessie Sheppard.
