This procedure delays the release of information and often results in the release of information that is less than optimal. For example, the release of information about the health status of a community may be delayed for several months, which could result in the community being exposed to a health hazard.
2. Only those communities with a "high" or "very high" risk of a disaster are eligible for a disaster plan. This means that many communities are not eligible for a disaster plan, even though they may be at risk of a disaster.
3. Disasters are not considered to be disasters until they are declared as such by the community. This means that the community must first determine that a disaster has occurred before it can request assistance from the federal government.
4. The federal government does not provide any financial assistance to communities that are not eligible for a disaster plan. This means that communities that are not eligible for a disaster plan must pay for the cost of their own disaster plan.
