

complies with the U. S. Coast Guard Safety Standards in effect on the date of certification." Letters and numbers can be no less than one-eighth of an inch high. At the manufacturer's option, the capacity and compliance plates may be combined.

VENTILATION

A cup of gasoline spilled in the bilge has the potential explosive power of 35 sticks of dynamite. This statement, commonly quoted over 20 years ago, may be an exaggeration. However, it illustrates a fact. Gasoline fumes in the bilge of a boat are highly explosive and a serious danger. They are heavier than air and will stay in the bilge until they are vented out.

Because of this danger, Coast Guard regulations require ventilation on many power boats. There are several ways to supply fresh air to engine and gasoline tank compartments and to remove dangerous vapors. Whatever the choice, it must meet Coast Guard standards.

—The following is not intended to be a complete discussion of the regulations. It is limited to the majority of recreational vessels. Contact your local Coast Guard office for further information.

General Precautions

Ventilation systems will not remove raw gasoline that leaks from tanks or fuel lines. If you smell gasoline fumes, you need immediate repairs. The best device for sensing gasoline fumes is your nose. Use it! If you smell gasoline in an engine compartment or elsewhere, don't start your engine. The smaller the compartment, the less gasoline it takes to make an explosive mixture.

Ventilation for Open Boats

In open boats, gasoline vapors are dispersed by the air that flows through them. So they are exempt from ventilation requirements.

To be "open," a boat must meet certain conditions. Engine and fuel tank compartments and long narrow compartments that join them must be open to the atmosphere." This means they must have at least 15 square inches of open area for each cubic foot of net compartment volume. The open area must be in direct contact with the atmosphere. There must also be no long, unventilated spaces open to engine and fuel tank compartments into which flames could extend.

Ventilation for All Other Boats

Powered and natural ventilation are required in an enclosed compartment with a permanently installed gasoline engine that has a cranking motor. A compartment is exempt if its engine is open to the atmosphere. Glow powered boats are also exempt.

VENTILATION SYSTEMS

There are two types of ventilation systems. One is "natural ventilation." In it, air circulates through closed spaces due to the boat's motion. The other type is "powered ventilation." In it, air is circulated by a motor-driven fan or fans.

Natural Ventilation System Requirements

A natural ventilation system has an air supply from outside the boat. The air supply may also be from a ventilated compartment or a compartment open to the atmosphere. Intake openings are required. In addition, intake ducts may be required to direct the air to appropriate compartments.

The system must also have an exhaust duct that runs in the lower third of the compartment. The exhaust opening must be into another ventilated compartment or into the atmosphere. Each supply opening and supply duct, if there is one, must be above the usual level of water in the bilge. Exhaust openings and ducts must also be above the bilge water. Openings and ducts must be at least three square inches in area or two inches in diameter. Openings should be placed so exhaust gases do not enter the fresh air intake. Exhaust fumes must not enter cabins or other enclosed, non-ventilated spaces. The carbon monoxide gas in them is deadly.

Intake and exhaust openings must be covered by covers or similar devices. These registers keep out rain water and water from breaking seas. Most often, intake registers face forward and exhaust openings aft. This aids the flow of air when the boat is moving or at anchor since most boats face into the wind when anchored.

Power Ventilation System Requirements

• See Figure 5

Powered ventilation systems must meet the standards of a natural system. They must also have one or more exhaust blowers. The blower duct can serve as the exhaust duct for natural ventilation if fan blades do not obstruct the air flow when not powered. Openings in engine compartment, for carburetion, are in addition to ventilation system requirements.

Fig. 5 Typical blower and duct system to vent fumes from the engine compartment

Required Safety Equipment

Coast Guard regulations require that your boat have certain equipment aboard. These requirements are minimums. Exceed them whenever you can.

TYPES OF FIRES

There are four common classes of fires:

- Class A—fires are in ordinary combustible materials such as paper or wood.
- Class B—fires involve gasoline, oil and grease.
- Class C—fires are electrical.
- Class D—fires involve ferrous metals.

One of the greatest risks to boaters is fire. This is why it is so important to carry the correct number and type of extinguishers onboard.

The best fire extinguisher for most boats is a Class B extinguisher. Never use water on Class B or Class C fires, as water spreads these types of fires. You should never use water on a Class C fire as it may cause you to be electrocuted.

FIRE EXTINGUISHERS

• See Figure 6

If your boat meets one or more of the following conditions, you must have at least one fire extinguisher aboard. The conditions are:

- Inboard or stern drive engines.
- Closed compartments under seats where portable fuel tanks can be stored.
- Double bottoms not sealed together or not completely filled with flotation materials.
- Closed living spaces.
- Closed storage compartments in which combustible or flammable materials are stored.
