

- "A newborn infant's intestinal flora will produce vitamin K."
- "If coagulation studies show a bleeding disorder, oral menadione is given."
- "Menadione is given intravenously shortly after delivery."
- "Phytonadione is given intramuscularly immediately after delivery."

ANS: D

A normal infant is born vitamin K deficient, and all infants are given an IM injection of phytonadione immediately after delivery. Newborns have not developed the intestinal flora needed to produce sufficient amounts of vitamin K. Menadione is not used in infants because of the increased risk of hyperbilirubinemia associated with its use. (NP: Cognitive Level: Application) (NP: p. 747) (NP: Nursing Process: Assessment) (NC: NCLEX: Client Needs Category: Physiologic Integrity: Pharmacologic and Parenteral Therapies)

754A nurse is discussing nutrition with a patient who expresses concerns about not always consuming vitamin B supplements consistent with the recommended dietary allowances (RDAs). What will the nurse tell this patient?

- The RDA is only an estimate of the amount of vitamin required and does not represent a scientific number.
- The RDA is the amount of vitamin needed by 95% of the population regardless of age or gender.
- The RDA represents the highest amount that can be consumed safely, so amounts less than this can be sufficient.
- The RDA represents an average, so low intake one day can be compensated for by increased intake on another day.

ANS: D

The recommended dietary allowance is the average daily dietary intake sufficient to meet the nutrient requirements of nearly all healthy individuals. Because it represents an average, a low amount one day can be compensated for by an increased amount on another day. The RDA values are determined through extensive experimental data and are not estimates. The estimated average requirement (EAR) is the level that meets the nutritional requirements of 50% of healthy individuals. The tolerable upper intake level (UL) is the highest average daily intake that can be consumed without risk of adverse effects. (NP: Cognitive Level: Analysis) (NP: p. 737) (NP: Nursing Process: Implementation) (NC: NCLEX: Client Needs Category: Health Promotion and Maintenance)

755 The nurse is assessing a patient who is malnourished and has a history of poor nutrition. The patient reports difficulty seeing at night. This patient is likely to be deficient in which fat-soluble vitamin?

- A (retinol)
