Peaceman,2000-04-01

The use of numerical reservoir simulation with high speed electronic computers has gained wide acceptance throughout the petroleum industry for making engineering studies of a wide variety of oil and gas reservoirs throughout the world These reservoir simulators have been designed for use by reservoir engineers who possess little or no background in the numerical mathematics upon which they are based In spite of the efforts to improve numerical methods to make reservoir simulators as reliable efficient and automatic as possible the user of a simulator is faced with a myriad of decisions that have nothing to do with the problem to be solved This book combines a review of some basic reservoir mechanics with the derivation of the differential equations that reservoir simulators are designed to solve Essential Analytic Heat Transfer C.Y. Wang,2024-05-20 This book discusses heat transfer which is an important topic in all physical phenomena that involve thermal energy transport The focus is on the three major means of heat transfer conduction convection and radiation New materials methods and insights are presented that reflect the author's contributions in this area. After many years of experience in teaching and research, Dr Wang has refined many useful analytic methods to treat thermo fluid problems. Certain physical truths can only be revealed by analysis and this book focuses on analytic means to solve heat transfer problems rather than numerical and experimental methods. Although computer numerical solutions are becoming quite efficient, analytical solutions are still needed for numerical accuracy. This book is written in concise and understandable terms and is useful to practicing scientists and engineers and also serves as an ideal textbook for graduate students. For best results, readers should have completed undergraduate courses in differential equations, introductory heat transfer and elementary fluid mechanics and should know how to use simple computer library functions such as integration and matrix inversion.

Advanced Technologies for the Quality Control and Standardization of Plant Based Medicines Jiang Xu, Caroline Howard, 2020-06-18. Herbs and herbal products are of paramount importance for human health. To be able to guarantee safety and quality standards and testing methods are needed. Pharmacopoeias contain quality control protocols setting the standards which are then required by governments. The quality traits are many, including the intrinsic variables of medicinal plants, e.g. the levels of the active compounds and the absence of possibly natural occurring toxic compounds. On the other hand, many quality traits are related to agricultural conditions and practices or to the harvesting and post harvest processing. With so many variables, quality control of the end product becomes extremely complex, time consuming and costly. To ensure the quality of medicinal plants for human consumption, quality management, the use of good practices at each step from seed to final product, becomes a crucial aspect. In general, quality control includes the inspection of the product's identity, purity and content based on its physical, chemical or biological properties. To ensure the quality of herbal medications, criteria such as botanical quality, type of preparation, physical constants, adulteration, contaminants, chemical constituents, pesticides, residues, et al. should be examined. Meanwhile, authentication of herbs is needed to avoid possible adulteration or contaminating plants, even toxic herbs such as Aristolochia species. Many of the methods are long standing, such as microscopy in combination with color reactions, but some 50 years ago chromatography developed as a major tool for both qualitative and quantitative analysis of herbal preparations. Nowadays, research is working on the improvement of these methods and on the development of novel tools. For instance, next generation sequencing and mass spectrometry imaging are emerging as new technologies for the quality control of herbal medicines. With these technologies, quick testing of herbal products and of mixed herbal powder preparations, including the testing for specific plant parts, botanical drugs can be achieved. Also, novel chemical tools such as metabolomics and Near Infrared Red (NIR) spectroscopy are being developed as powerful tools to identify and to link these with activity by using chemometric tools such as multivariate analysis. Finally, progress of informatic tools such as machine learning helps to deal with the big data generated by sequencing or mass spectrometry. However, these new technologies, like all other new born technologies, should be tested and perfected for a broad range of products.
