

The Black Death: Bubonic Plague

The Black Death, or Bubonic Plague, was one of the most significant pandemics in time. "The death toll was so high that it had significant consequences on European medieval society as a whole, with a shortage of farmers resulting in demands for an end to serfdom, a general questioning of authority and rebellions, and the entire abandonment of many towns and villages. (Cartwright, June 2018)." The Black Death served as one of the earliest known pandemics, spread quickly throughout Europe and beyond, and had a strong societal impact. The pandemics that we have in today's society have similarities to the Black Death that can be compared and contrasted with different time periods. The Black Death has shaped the way society reacts to pandemics today.

The origination of the Black Death began in China in the early 1300s. "The Black Death was a plague pandemic which devastated Europe from 1347 to 1352 CE, killing an estimated 25-30 million people. (Cartwright, June 2018)." This was actually a disease carried by fleas that latched onto rodents. The fleas were able to spread the plague to humans which spread very quickly. "Since China was one of the busiest of the world's trading nations, it was only a matter of time before the outbreak of plague in China spread to western Asia and Europe (The Middle Ages.Net, 2011)."

After spreading throughout western Asia and Europe, the Black Death began taking its' toll throughout Italy, France, Spain, Britain, Russia, Germany and many more within a couple of years. Many were exposed to the Black Death by ships coming and going throughout the nations, bringing the plague to other lands. The people who were exposed unknowingly spread the disease, which compounded the severity of this horrendous pandemic.

They would become exposed on the ships and unknowingly carry it to other countries. Many who were surrounded by those who had the plague in their town or village would panic and leave to get away from the plague, not realizing that they were already exposed, hence exposing others. The winters often seemed to stop the plague, but it would return in the spring, killing more people. This is one reason that the Black Death seemed to be more severe and unstoppable in some areas than in others. The Black Death would last into the 1600s. "The survivors lived in constant fear of the plague's return, and the disease did not disappear until the 1600s, (The Middle Ages.Net, 2011)."

The symptoms of the black death were so extreme that people would go to sleep with no externally visible signs of the disease and then die before. The host would get large bumps filled with blood and puss everywhere on their body. Being airborne made the disease very efficient at reaching people in an accelerating manner. The name is derived from one of the symptoms of the disease. This is the bumps that were formed on the body were dark compared to the rest of the victim's skin.
