Two American Boys in the War Zone Levi Worthington Green,2022-07-21 After the Porter brothers Sidney and Raymond had escaped from Mexico in their flight from Mexican rebels they proceeded as rapidly as possible to their El Paso home There they found their father who had succeeded several weeks before in reaching El Paso from Chihuahua Mrs Porter declared that the boys should then remain at home at least until they had ceased to be boys She said that her nerves were not equal to another such strain as they had endured while the boys were in the wilds of Mexico and that she would have no more wandering in dangerous foreign lands Her husband reminded her however that there seemed to be nothing in the boys recent adventure that would justify so drastic a prohibition The boys had successfully made a difficult journey without harm and had proved that they were quite able to take care of themselves under unusual conditions of great danger as he had all along maintained that they were There was no question though of their going back to the Mexican mine The entire State of Chihuahua was so unsettled by the frequent changes of the revolution that even Mr Porter admitted it would be the wildest folly to attempt to return there So the boys entered the El Paso High School for the rest of that year and the next and their father gradually reconciled himself to the idea of losing his entire Mexican investments
