

RIP GEORGE FOREMAN, GEORGE FOREMAN, AND GEORGE FOREMAN

My copy

TJ

Many students have a favorite teacher they like to remember. They take joy in telling all the fond memories they had studying under his or her wing. My favorite teacher is actually three fish. I killed them all.

Like many three-year-olds, my understanding of the world was limited. I didn't know that if you swung your whole body from the sides of wooden cabinets you'll break the cabinet in half. I didn't know that permanent marker was permanent (children have a weird way of not being able to use basic logic) or that it would make my mother furious if used to draw on the carpet. I also didn't know that fish could die if I gave them too much food. My three fish, George Foreman, George Foreman, and George Foreman, were some species of rare tropical fish that required precise amounts of food and specific salt-to-water ratios. I thought they were goldfish. One day my mom was feeding the fish and asked me if I'd like to help feed them. I excitedly agreed to do so and watched as my mom sprinkled a bit of fish food into the tank. Then it was my turn, and in my excited state, I poured the whole container into the tank. My mom screamed, and my dad came running into the room. Realizing there was nothing we could do, we decided to sit there and watch them die (although to this day I still think it would've been a better idea to not watch at all). I cried as I watched my aquatic friends slowly eat themselves to death. First, George Foreman died. Then, George Foreman died not too long after. Finally, George Foreman died, and we flushed them down the toilet.
