Chapter 2 Job Order Costing

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

1. The difference between job order costing and process costing relates to the type of product or service the company provides, and whether that product or service is homogeneous or unique. Job order costing is used by companies that offer customized or unique products or services, where each unit or service tends to be very different than the next. Process costing is used in companies that offer standardized or homogeneous products or services, where each unit or service is very similar to the next.
2. Job order costing is used in companies that offer customized products or services. Examples include any product that is specially built for a specific customer (e.g. custom home, custom built boat, custom made furniture), unique services provided to customers (e.g. an auto repair shop, a catering business), or industries that serve clients with unique needs (e.g. accounting firm, law firm, architecture firm).
3. Process costing is used in companies that offer standardized or homogeneous products or services. Examples include canned and bottled goods, petroleum products, perfume, toilet paper, dishwashing detergent, and many other common household products.
4. Examples of service companies that offer homogenized services include Jiffy Lube oil and filter change, a children's haircut salon, a nail salon, a tax return service (e.g. H&R Block), an attorney who provides standardized legal services (such as will
