Quinan,2020-12 Situated at the crossroads of queer theory and postcolonial studies Hybrid Anxieties analyzes the intertwined and composite aspects of identities and textual forms in the wake of the French Algerian War 1954 1962 C L Quinan argues that the war precipitated a dynamic in which a contestation of hegemonic masculinity occurred alongside a production of queer modes of subjectivity embodiment and memory that subvert norms Innovations in literature and cinema were also directly impacted by the long and difficult process of decolonization as the war provoked a rethinking of politics and aesthetics The novels films and poetry analyzed in Hybrid Anxieties trace this imbrication of content and form demonstrating how a postwar fracturing had both salutary and injurious effects not only on bodies and psyches but also on artistic forms Adopting a queer postcolonial perspective Hybrid Anxieties adds a new impulse to the question of how to rethink hegemonic notions of gender sexuality and nationality thereby opening up new spaces for considering the redemptive and productive possibilities of negotiating life in a postcolonial context Without losing sight of the trauma of this particularly violent chapter in history Hybrid Anxieties proposes a new kind of hybridity that however anxious and anticipatory emphasizes the productive forces of a queer desire to deconstruct teleological relationships between past present and future General Report of the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners Great Britain.
