Question: Why do different groups of people have different rates of disease? (What are the different rates of disease in different groups of people?)

Answer: The different rates of disease in different groups of people are due to differences in the prevalence of the disease in the population. The prevalence of a disease is the proportion of the population that has the disease at a given time. The prevalence of a disease can be affected by many factors, including the incidence of the disease, the duration of the disease, and the mortality rate of the disease.

With the 2008 election, the topic surrounding security, terrorism and intelligence, which has been dominating the news cycle, is likely to continue to be a major focus. The 2008 election was a turning point in the history of the United States, and the 2009 election is likely to be a turning point in the history of the world.
