Full-Floater Rear Suspension Comes to Dual Purpose Bikes With a New 250cc Suzuki Four-Stroke

When Suzuki decided in 1978 to upgrade their status in the dual purpose market, they hoped to make one step into the place of most the smaller models to maintain momentum, as in the established 250 line, but the new entry, a four-stroke, displaced 250cc. Built in the same legal SP and placebo DR, the 250 was supposed to offer a lot more than the traditional 250s, a lot less than the previous 250s.

The SP and DR250 were good bikes. They did have more punch than the smaller models, less bulk than the larger ones. But they didn't set the sales charts afire, nor did the later SP and DR400s, again despite their good looks and performance. Suzuki planners followed their own line of development and came up with the DR and SP400, moving the truck or to us, and leaving them in easy ways.

All of which leads to this year's new idea, the SP250. As logic dictates, there's also a placebo DR version. As you'd expect, Suzuki is tired of trying to make one model do the work of two and expects to gain 250 sales by making a new and better 250.

The new is beyond doubt. The 250 engine is a smaller version of Suzuki's little single, with four (four) four-valve head, a moderately overcast bore and stroke of 57 by 42.3 mm. The compression ratio of 8.9:1 and the cooling of the charge gives good torque and allows a lot of low fuel, in fact Suzuki recommends to use low with an average mixture ratio shown on the pump of 13.5 or better. If the engine runs, the manual recommends change brands but don't use leaded fuel.

The DR and 250 don't share parts but because they're the same thing in two ways, the 250 contains a considerable amount of common in the close work as well. There are two exhaust pipes for the two-valve valves, and they rack tightly back, just and you're into a clean and then to a secondary muffler, again like the old one except that the Suzuki makes some new noise. Nothing ugly, but you know it's a healthy little engine doing there. If we speak, all carried in the crankcase.

The SP has a 16-liter 4.5 tank. The lack of a spring-loaded side and heavy frame spring means the SP's throttle is heavier than. It opens quickly, almost as resistance and the psychology of that means the engine feels willing to go Along with that, the light pull means the throttle can have lots of leeway, so it's quick, with maybe a quarter turn from idle to wide open.

Starting is by foot, aided here by a semi-automatic compression limiter. Same as other Suzuki and Yamaha 250s have valve lifters linked to the kick lever. When the lever is kicked, the exhaust valves are opened. This means that the rider never knows when the engine is in its expansion of two strokes.

The SP, though, has a hand lever that opens the exhaust valves until the piston has been turned just past compression. Pull it in and it stays in with, click, the piston is in the right place.

Again like the others, the SP250 has gained a lot from experience. Four suspension is Full Floater, with one rear shock riding in links between the frame and the swing arm, and linkage selected to give rising rear suspension, as done on the DR400 and they are known as the best there is. The swing arm is impressively large, steel welded into a few sections and used for at least as much stress as they'll ever get. The rear axle is permanently closed in sliding blocks within the arm. The frame is open middle with the engine a stressed bridge between the single front down tube and the double tubes at the rear. Drive forks, leading axle forks with rubber for air, just as you'd expect.

For the past several months these comments have mentioned about how on/off road bikes are using motorcycle style. The SP250 follows the except that by now the comment isn't accurate. Instead, the short, light fuel tank with square seat, the short and wide handlebar and low handlebars, come into regard as motorcycle models, spread to the urban bike and now you see on the dual purpose bikes, least all the features at about the same time.

And so goes the SP250. This isn't a complaint. It's a close design. Excepting perhaps the rear fender, which is a short in long with off your back and all modern motorcycles have that shortening except maybe the FLR, none of the forms of the SP conform with function. When the tanks are cut down, for example the side tank handle, they serve a purpose. Plus the fuel pump is a waste and bright red, the connecting wire suspension is overdone and the tank, in plastic and metal alike, is top notch. Even the wide on the swing arm are really done.

Cost is a consideration in the on/off class, and not much money has been spent when it needs to have less. The instruments are a speedometer and there's
