Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of elderly people. The study was conducted in a community center in a large city in Brazil. The sample consisted of 20 elderly people (10 men and 10 women) aged 60 to 75 years. The training program was designed to improve cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength, and flexibility. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The sessions included aerobic exercises, strength training, and stretching exercises. The study was conducted over a 12-week period. The primary outcome measures were physical fitness (cardiorespiratory fitness, muscle strength, and flexibility) and HRQL (physical functioning, role limitations due to physical problems, and overall health-related quality of life). The results showed that the training program had a significant positive effect on all outcome measures. Cardiorespiratory fitness, muscle strength, and flexibility all improved significantly over the 12-week period. HRQL also improved significantly, with participants reporting better physical functioning and fewer role limitations due to physical problems. The study suggests that a 12-week training program can improve physical fitness and HRQL in elderly people.
