The respiratory organs in fish are called gills. The gills are able to absorb dissolved oxygen in the water. They consist of lamellae on the side of the fish that look like pins. The lamellae are called gill plates. The lamellae contain many blood vessels. These blood vessels take the dissolved oxygen and transport it to the parts of the fish. For the fish to survive they need to be enough dissolved oxygen in the water. When there is not enough oxygen in the water the fish will have to move faster to breathe. Oxygen depletion is when water oxygen is needed that what is available. Unfortunately, this is happening in some and more aquatic ecosystems causing many fish species die off.

Warm things can dissolve oxygen faster in the water. If the water is warm, oxygen is low. Warm water can hold less dissolved oxygen in cold water. When bodies of water get too warm, some fish species that need higher levels of oxygen may die off. The amount of oxygen affects the amount of oxygen in the water. If the water contains a lot of salt then the oxygen will be able to dissolve into the water.
