

SOUND WAVES

Sound wave travel as transfer of transmission of energy through a medium in the form of a disturbance. It requires the transmission of the particles of the medium along with disturbance, without transferring the energy from one particle to another.

The waves are of three types – mechanical, electromagnetic and matter waves. Mechanical waves require a medium and only in media which possess elasticity and inertia. Matter waves, sound waves and electromagnetic waves are transverse waves of this type. Electromagnetic waves do not require any material medium for propagation. Matter waves, electromagnetic waves, light, radio waves, microwaves, X-rays, gamma rays are electromagnetic waves. The waves exhibit interference, diffraction, polarization, reflection, refraction, dispersion and other wave properties.

Characteristics of sound waves

(i) Pressure variation is a form of disturbance travelling in the medium along the parallel direction of the wave, along the wave motion.

(ii) It is necessary that the medium should possess elasticity and inertia.

(iii) Air particles of the medium, move back and forth in the direction of wave motion (iv) wave particle begins to vibrate a little later than the disturbance.

(iv) The wave travels at different from the particle velocity. The velocity of a wave is constant for a given medium, whereas the velocity of the particles varies changing and is sinusoidal.

(v) During the propagation of wave particle, there is transfer of energy from one particle to other but without any transmission of the particle of the medium.

(vi) The wave exhibits reflection, refraction, diffraction and interference.

Longitudinal wave motion

The two types of mechanical wave are (i) transverse wave motion and

(ii) longitudinal wave motion and (iii) transverse wave motion.

Sound, electromagnetic waves in the form of radio, light rays, etc. The mechanical disturbance of the particle in the medium about their initial position is called

Transverse wave motion

Transverse wave motion is that disturbance in which particles of the medium move perpendicular to the direction of propagation of the wave. Such waves are called transverse waves. Examples of transverse waves are waves on strings, electromagnetic waves, etc.
