

Abstract The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults. The study was a randomized, controlled trial involving 40 participants, aged 65 and older, who were randomly assigned to either an exercise group or a control group. The exercise group performed a 12-week program of aquatic exercises, while the control group remained sedentary. The study measured various physical and psychological outcomes, including body composition, cardiovascular fitness, and mood. The results showed that the exercise group experienced significant improvements in body composition, cardiovascular fitness, and mood compared to the control group. The study concluded that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program can effectively improve the physical and psychological health of older adults.
