concerning their economic status of their country. Specifically, they are questioning the quality of life in their old home country. First, they thought that U.S. life is significantly improved from their native land because America is a better place than in their country. With the U.S. life, they thought that their travelling makes the time spent more meaningful and interesting. In contrast, it is somewhat difficult to find meaning and value from the travelling in their country. Second, they thought that their travelling is a good experience and that they should have more travelling opportunities and spend more time travelling. They also thought that their travelling is a good experience and that they should have more travelling opportunities and spend more time travelling.
