These authors also demonstrated that there is a significant effect of the size of the group on the level of social loafing. Social loafing was highest in a 10-person group and lowest in a 2-person group. The authors also found that the effect of group size on social loafing was moderated by the type of task. Social loafing was highest for a task that required a high level of effort and lowest for a task that required a low level of effort.

Abstract The 1991–1992 season was characterized by a high incidence of influenza A virus infections in the community. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of influenza A virus infection on the immune response to a tetanus toxoid booster. A total of 100 healthy subjects were vaccinated with a tetanus toxoid booster. The subjects were divided into two groups: one group received the booster vaccine during the 1991–1992 influenza season, and the other group received the booster vaccine during the 1990–1991 influenza season. The subjects in the 1991–1992 group were also tested for influenza A virus infection. The results showed that the subjects in the 1991–1992 group had a significantly higher antibody response to the tetanus toxoid booster compared to the subjects in the 1990–1991 group. This suggests that influenza A virus infection may enhance the immune response to a tetanus toxoid booster.

Abstract—This study examined the effects of a 12-week, 100% body weight (BW) resistance training program on the body composition and muscle strength of 10 sedentary, middle-aged men. The men were randomly assigned to either a control group (CON) or a resistance training group (RT). The RT group performed a 12-week, 100% BW resistance training program, while the CON group remained sedentary. The results showed that the RT group had a significant decrease in body fat percentage and an increase in muscle strength compared to the CON group. The findings suggest that a 12-week, 100% BW resistance training program can effectively improve body composition and muscle strength in sedentary, middle-aged men.
