Abstract
 The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary middle-aged men. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The participants were randomly assigned to either a training group or a control group. The training group performed a 12-week program of aerobic and resistance training. The control group did not exercise. Physical fitness was measured by a 6-minute walk test, and HRQL was measured by the SF-36 questionnaire. The results showed that the training group had significantly higher physical fitness and HRQL than the control group at the end of the 12-week program.

Abstract. The authors examined the relationship between the use of the Internet and the use of other information sources by students in a large, public, urban university. The study was conducted using a survey of 1,000 students. The results of the study indicate that the use of the Internet is positively related to the use of other information sources. The study also found that the use of the Internet is related to the use of other information sources in a non-linear fashion. The study has implications for the design of information systems and the development of information literacy programs.
