

With the Black Panther Party, Huey P. Newton was the most militant of the Panthers. Adding the Black Panther Band to the group in 1968 was a key move.

I thought it was the perfect name, and I always knew from day one that the band would go from city to city, just like a train. That was the whole idea.

—Eldridge Cleaver

The Black Panther Band's music was a mix of funk, soul, and jazz. The group was also known for its political activism and its role in the Black Panther Party's efforts to fight against racism and oppression.

One of the band's most famous songs is "Black Panther," which was written by George Brown. The song is a powerful statement about the Black Panther Party's commitment to social justice and equality.

The band's music was a key part of the Black Panther Party's identity and its efforts to inspire and mobilize the Black community. The band's music was a powerful statement about the Black Panther Party's commitment to social justice and equality.
