

Joseph Stalin and First Five-Year Plan

19 pages | 4636 words

Abstract The historical scope of this research study essay concentrates on the methods undertaken by Joseph Stalin in industrializing the Soviet Union through his Very First Five-Year Plan. Hence, the main concern occurring throughout this essay is the following: To What Extent Were Joseph Stalin's Approaches In Utilizing The Very First Five-Year Strategy (1928-1932) Reliable In Attaining His Original Industrial Objectives? In order to be able to evaluate such questionable subject, the essay very first addresses how Stalin approached the idea for economic development, generally by utilizing 3 methods: centralized, directive planning, utilization of political propaganda campaigns, and a focus on heavy industry. The results of industrialization are then analyzed and compared to the originally proposed goals. Much of the research conducted was based on main sources of proof as well as secondary sources that a lot of properly portrayed the situation of the Soviet Union at the time and its progress through the specified time period of the Stalin administration. Analysis of such documents was also needed in order to correctly deduce the trustworthiness and validity of the evidence presented in order to have the ability to base the conclusions on the info. Last but not least, making use of historians' interpretations was used in order to corroborate claims or supply practical alternative viewpoints. This research essay therefore concluded that, although he did managed to expand tremendously financial investment in market and require the nation out of its backward, agrarian state, Stalin did not attain extensive industrialization for the Soviet Union. Basically, the deep bureaucratization of the economy, in concert with the particular functions of the Soviet policy, produced a combination of inconsistent forces originating from bureaucratic self-interests and impulsive political will. This would avoid the introduction of the right mix of elements that would assure the typical functioning of the economy.
