The Great Matter Experiment

1. At Maple Leaf Elementary, fifth graders were excited about the upcoming STAAR test. They decided to work together on a science project to prepare for the test.

2. On a sunny Saturday, they gathered in Mr. Johnson's room. First, they set up a table for building water, three clear cups, a stopwatch, and a thermometer. They were ready to compare and contrast the physical properties of water.

3. The three students were excited to start their experiments on Monday. They started with a solid block of ice. They carefully placed it on the table and watched it melt. They noticed that the ice was melting faster than they expected. They decided to try a different experiment.

4. Next, they moved on to liquid water. They carefully poured water into a cup and watched it evaporate. They noticed that the water was evaporating faster than they expected. They decided to try a different experiment.

5. Finally, it was time for the gas experiment. They set up a bottle filled with water. They noticed that the water was bubbling. They decided to try a different experiment.
