3. Does the student require direct and intensive instruction in order to acquire, maintain, and transfer skills to other contexts?

In order for the student to progress in the grade-level or course curriculum, instruction must be direct (small group or individualized) and intensive (continuous and focused). The student needs specialized instruction and techniques over a period of time to acquire and apply academic knowledge and skills. In addition, the student needs frequent reminders to transfer knowledge and skills to other contexts. For instance, a student may be able to add 25 and 25 but is not able to apply this skill when asked the sum of two quarters.
