

quickly integrated across our regional operations and functions. These capabilities allow us to simplify processes, shorten development cycles and foster closer events.

We effectively manage Whirlpool's global manufacturing resources to optimize the product mix of our brands in each market around the world. In North America, for example, we leverage the scale and efficiency of Whirlpool's Clyde, Ohio, facility—the world's largest cleanroom washer manufacturing operation—to help maintain the company's laundry leadership in the North American market.

We also leverage the advantages of Whirlpool's production capacity elsewhere in the world to strengthen our cost position in global markets. Brazil, for example, is one of our key export platforms for Whirlpool's global sales and distribution network. Our Brazilian operation significantly increased the level of exports from the region last year, which included shipments of new Whirlpool refrigerator products to customers in North America, Europe and Asia.

Whirlpool Asia also serves as an export base for such products as microwave ovens and smaller appliances that expand the product portfolios of Whirlpool's brands in Europe and North America. Increasingly, Whirlpool China is filling another important role as a strategic source for the company's global procurement network.

Whirlpool's tradition of driving continual improvements in quality and productivity remains a key focus of our operations and a vital competitive lever. In 2003, productivity improvements for our North American and European operations reached record levels. Operating excellence, our Six Sigma process, is the tool we use to improve and sustain these cost savings. We also are expanding the company's lean manufacturing initiative throughout our global operating platform to further reduce waste and costs. The combination of all these productivity measures will help improve our already competitive cost position and allow Whirlpool operations to generate further increases in cash flow.

In 2004, our impact economic conditions worldwide to gradually improve throughout the year. Globally, we will continue to build strong brands supported by relevant consumer innovation. We will continue to forge relationships with value-added resellers and builders, and we will continue to drive record productivity levels by leveraging our unique global operating platform. These are the drivers that will continue to fuel Whirlpool's growth and provide our customers with a brand experience that is second to none.

Jeff Leung
President and Chief Operating Officer

■ In a listing of Brazil's top export companies by the Brazilian Ministry of Development Industry and Trade, Whirlpool's combined operations were ranked in the top 10 in several export categories.

■ European customers in France, Sweden and Hungary named Whirlpool the best and most trusted appliance brand in the Sweden's Digest "Trusted Brands Survey."
