Introduction

“Miss Evers’s Boys” is a film that is based on a true story known as a Tuskegee Syphilis study. This study was conducted between 1932 and 1972 to explore the natural course of syphilis among African-American males in the US. Miss Evers, the nurse, was instructed to tell men that the government will treat them for free, while no factual treatment was intended. Even when one of the characters, Caleb Humphrie, was treated by penicillin during his serving in the army, others were denied medication.

Main body

This film shows the violation of respect for persons, namely, the rights to full disclosure and self-determination. The study participants were not notified that they are test subjects, which is the intentional concealment of information. When people asked for help, the hospital workers denied their request as their names were in a special list. These African-Americans were deprived of the right to decide on the participation in the experiment, which means coercion and the inability to withdraw from the study, not to mention a lack of informed consent (Koskenvuori et al., 2019). Such an approach to patients is unacceptable in modern healthcare since all the patients should be treated with respect.

Conclusion

To conclude, healthcare leaders should be attentive to the reports on unethical behaviors to openly discuss them and prevent future

Endings and Beginnings Larry Palmer, 2000-05-30 As society struggles to cope with the many repercussions of assisted life and death the evening news is filled with stories of legal battles over frozen embryos and the possible prosecution of doctors for their patients' suicide Using an institutional approach as an alternative to the prevailing rights-based analysis of problems in law and medicine this study explains why society should resist the tendency to look to science and law for a resolution of intimate matters such as how our children are born and how we die Palmer's institutional approach demonstrates that legislative analysis is often more important than judicial analysis when it comes to issues raised by new reproductive technologies and physician-assisted suicide A reliance on individual rights alone for answers to the complex ethical questions that result from society's faith in scientific progress and science's close alliance with medicine will be insufficient and ill advised Palmer predicts that the key role of the family as a societal institution will mean that questions of assisted reproduction will be resolved more in response to market forces than through legal intervention However he does support a strong role for legislatures in decisions involving the physicians' role in our deaths These findings are based on the differing views of the Supreme Court justices in these matters a tendency to protect family formation from state interference as in abortion decisions but support of a legislative obligation to control medicine-assisted suicide According to Palmer recent Supreme Court decisions on physician-assisted suicide usher in a new era in how legal institutions will resolve
