“The Skeletal system consists of bone; ligament, and cartilage” (Dunn, 2019). The Skeletal system divides into the axial skeleton including the skull, spine and ribs and acts as the anchor points and the appendicular skeleton including everything that hangs off the axial skeleton like the upper, lower limbs, the pelvic and shoulder girdles. Axial skeleton supports the upright position and protects the internal organs, the appendicular skeleton supports the body movement. The skeleton gives the body its shape, which changes with growth. It determines height and the size of the hands and feet. The skeletal bones are held together by ligaments, tendons attach the muscles to the skeleton bones. When muscles contract, they pull on bones producing movement or hold the bones in a stable position. The skeleton protects the internal organs from damage, surrounding them with bone. The skull, spinal column and rib cage, protect the brain, spinal cord, and heart and lungs. Larger bones
