

Chapter Five: Death Investigations

System of Death Investigation: from early in human history, the cause of death has been important in determining inheritance and taxes as well as determination of any crime or public health issues.

- Death investigation still remains the first line of defense against infectious disease in our society
- Coroner, or crowner of the king
 - The government agent charged with responsibility for death investigations
- These duties carried over to the American colonies and death investigation was generally considered a local governmental or county function.

Medical Examiner System:

- In early establishment of the coroner position there were no set standards for the individual holding the position in fact most times they were elected. No education or training is required.
- In the late 19th century a movement began to establish standard for education and training
- Many rural areas still retain the elected coroner system. However, in general the coroner system is no longer considered the best structure for systematic death investigation.

Forensic Pathology and Forensic Pathologists:

- A central player in modern death investigation is the forensic pathologist
 - Physicians specializing in pathology and who subspecialize in the use of law and medicine within the determination of the cause of death
 - Studies disease, its causes and diagnosis
- Today in most large cities Medical Examiners are required to be forensic pathologists
- In areas where the Coroner still exists, those offices have forensic pathologists perform autopsies
- Anatomic: autopsies and examine tissues
- Clinical: manage bodily fluid testing laboratories

The purpose of investigating a death is to determine its cause and manner

- A forensic pathologist must be prepared to present physical evidence to support his or her conclusions about the cause of manner

Drawing such conclusions depends on information gained from:

- Investigations, witness statements
- Descriptions of the death scene
- Medical case histories
- Autopsy findings
 - Considerable information is needed to be able to draw conclusions
 - Evaluate physical evidence to support conclusions
