

PROBLEM	POSSIBLE CAUSE	SOLUTION
9. Excessive amounts of smoke coming out loading door when loading.	Improper draft. Chimney cap too close to top of chimney. Too long of run of smoke pipe from Woodchuck to chimney.	Measure with draft gauge-should have .04 to .06 water column. Relocate. Relocate Woodchuck closer to chimney.
10. Puffing of smoke through draft control.	Improper draft. Down draft on chimney. Plugged chimney.	Check draft with gauge. Should be .04 to .06 water column. Check for cold spots on chimney or obstruction outside chimney. Trees or other buildings. Check with mirror in clean-out door or send cleaning brush down chimney. Check stovepipe connections.
11. Excessive dirt build-up around air vent in home.	Too much smoke escaping out of loading door when loading. Bad weld in fire box of unit. No return air ducting.	Check problem No. 9. Call dealer immediately. Install return air duct.
12. Improper seal around door.	Door rope not sealing on door frame. Loose door from shipment.	Check door rope so that all parts of door frame are sealed, especially corners. Simply bend door latch in to tighten door seal.
13. Excessive creosote build-up. A reminder, whatever kind of fuel you burn, there is some kind of residue build-up on the furnace and chimney. Same with wood no matter how good the conditions.	The use of wet, frozen, or unseasoned wood. The use of soft wood, particularly those of high resin content such as plywood or blandex with glue. Poor natural draft or an obstruction in the stove pipe or chimney flue. Too long of burning times. Inadequate amount of oxygen supplied to the combustion chamber Low fire or flue gas temperatures. Uninsulated stovepipe or chimney flues, especially if construction is exterior to the house. Air leaks in the stove pipe or chimney.	If you have to use wet wood, make loads smaller and burn them hotter. Avoid using if possible. Measure draft with gauge. Should have a minimum of .04-.06 water columns of draft. Smaller and hotter fires. Adjust draft for hotter fires or in some homes, it has been determined there was not enough in the basement due to such an air-tight home. We recommend 4" round hole to the outside with a screen on to keep varmints out. Smaller loads of wood and hotter fire. Stack temps. should maintain minimum 300" to 400". Never use uninsulated pipe for chimneys installed on the outside of the house, INSULATE! Check chimney from top to bottom. NOTE: Creosote is a tarry liquid or solid coming from distillation of wood during the combustion process. The heavier buildups, the greater chance of a chimney fire. NOTE: No matter how seasoned the wood, no matter how good the draft, you always will get a small amount of soot buildup. Should be cleaned before winter firing and during mid-winter's firing.
