

6. What is the basic assumption stated by Healthy People 2010 as it relates to public health efforts?
- Health disparities among any groups are morally and legally wrong.
 - Health care is the most important priority in government planning and funding.
 - The health of individuals cannot be separated from the health of the community.
 - The government is responsible for lengthening the life span of Americans.

ANS: C

The major premise of Healthy People 2010 was that the health of the individual cannot be entirely separate from the health of the larger community. Public health practice focuses on the community as a whole, and the effect of the community's health status (resources) on the health of individuals, families, and groups. The goal is to prevent disease and disability and promote and protect the health of the community as a whole. Public health can be described as what society collectively does to ensure that conditions exist in which people can be healthy. The basic assumptions of public health do not judge the morality of health disparities. The focus is on prevention of illness not on spending more on illness care. Additionally, individual responsibility for making healthy choices is the directive for lengthening life span not the role of the government.

7. Which of the following actions would most likely be performed by a public health nurse?
- Asking community leaders what interventions should be chosen
 - Assessing the community and deciding on appropriate interventions
 - Using data from the main health care institutions in the community to determine needed health services
 - Working with community groups to create policies to improve the environment

ANS: D

Although the public health nurse might engage in any of the tasks listed, he or she works primarily with members of the community to carry out core public health functions, including assessment of the population as a whole and engaging in promoting health and improving the environment. The interventions of asking community leaders which interventions should be chosen, assessing the community and deciding on appropriate interventions, and using data from health care institutions do not demonstrate the engagement of the community when making decisions about what the community actually wants and needs.

8. Which public health nurse most clearly fulfills the responsibilities of this role?
- The nurse who met with several groups to discuss community recreation issues
 - The nurse who spent the day attending meetings of various health agencies
 - The nurse who talked to several people about their particular health concerns
 - The nurse who watched the city council meeting on local cable television

ANS: B

Any of these descriptions might represent a nurse communicating, cooperating, or collaborating with community residents or groups about health concerns. A major challenge for the future is the need for public health nursing specialists to be more aggressive in working collaboratively with various groups in the community as well as professional colleagues in institutional settings to deal with barriers to health. However, the nurse who spent the day attending meetings of various health agencies is the most representative, because in public health, concerns are addressed from a broader perspective. In public health, broad concerns of the community should be addressed. Concerns are broader than recreation, individual concerns are not as important as aggregate priorities, and watching television (a one-way form of communication) is less effective than interacting with others.

9. Which of the following best defines aggregate?
- A large group of persons
 - A collection of individuals and families
 - A collection of people who share one or more characteristics
 - Another name for demographic group

ANS: C

An aggregate is defined a collection of people who share one or more personal or environmental characteristics. Members of a community can be defined in terms of either geography (e.g., a county, a group of counties, or a state) or a special interest (e.g., children attending a particular school). These members make up a population. The term population may be used interchangeably with the term aggregate. A large group of persons, a collection of individuals and families, and another name for demographic group are not accurate definitions of the term aggregate.

10. Which question asked by a novice nurse would be the most reflective of an understanding of the role of a public health nurse?
- "Which groups are at the greatest risk for problems?"
 - "Which patients should I see first as I begin my day?"
 - "With which physicians will I be most closely collaborating?"
 - "With which nursing assistants will I partner the most?"

ANS: A

Asking which groups are at greatest risk reflects a community-oriented perspective. The incorrect responses reflect a focus on individuals rather than a community-oriented perspective.

11. Making sure that essential community-oriented health services are available defines which of the core public health functions?
- Policy development
 - Assessment
 - Assurance
 - Scientific knowledge-based care

ANS: C

Assurance includes making sure that essential community-oriented health services are available in the community. The definition does not fit the terms assessment, policy development. Scientific knowledge-based care is not a core function of public health. Assessment is systematic data collection on the population, monitoring the population's health status, and making information available about the health of the community. Policy development refers to efforts to develop policies that support the health of the population, including using a scientific knowledge base to make policy decisions.
