

Teacher Guide: Archimedes' Principle

Learning Objectives

Students will:

- 1. Demonstrate that the mass of a floating body is equal to the mass of displaced liquid.
- 2. Experimentally predict mass for a piece of glass submerged completely with water 100% full.
- 3. Understand how gravity and the buoyant force influence motion and support of a boat.
- 4. Explain Archimedes' principle.
- 5. Apply Archimedes' principle to fluid situations.

Knowledge

Archimedes' principle: buoyant force, density, pressure, mass, volume, weight

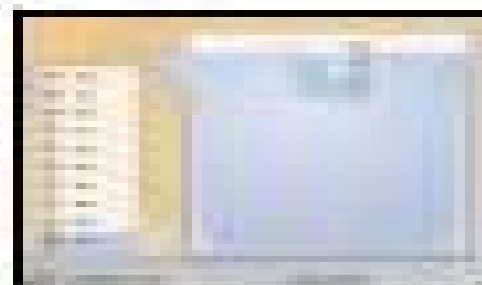

Understanding

Students are introduced why a boat floats (mass and volume) and how buoyant force relates to gravity. Buoyant force is explained as the upward force exerted by a fluid on an object submerged in it.

The Archimedes' Principle Demo shows a simple "boat" floating in water. Students are introduced to the concept of the buoyant force, which is the upward force exerted by a fluid on an object submerged in it. The boat floats in the water, and the buoyant force is equal to the weight of the boat. The boat is made of a material that is less dense than water, so it floats. The buoyant force is equal to the weight of the boat, and the boat is in equilibrium.

The following questions are designed to help students understand the concept of buoyant force.

- 1. Question 1: Students explain that the mass of a boat is equal to the mass of displaced liquid.
- 2. Question 2: Students determine that the buoyant force is equal to the weight of the boat.
- 3. Question 3: Students explain how the buoyant force is related to the weight of the boat.
- 4. Question 4: Students explain how the buoyant force is related to the weight of the boat.

Suggested Activity Sequence

1. Pre-Demo Activity: Floating Boat  10 minutes
Students explain why a boat floats. They are introduced to the concept of buoyant force, which is the upward force exerted by a fluid on an object submerged in it. The boat floats in the water, and the buoyant force is equal to the weight of the boat. The boat is made of a material that is less dense than water, so it floats. The buoyant force is equal to the weight of the boat, and the boat is in equilibrium.
2. Archimedes' Principle Demo  10 minutes
The teacher demonstrates the Archimedes' Principle Demo. The boat floats in the water, and the buoyant force is equal to the weight of the boat. The boat is made of a material that is less dense than water, so it floats. The buoyant force is equal to the weight of the boat, and the boat is in equilibrium.
3. Post-Demo Activity: Buoyant Force  10 minutes
Students explain how the buoyant force is related to the weight of the boat. They are introduced to the concept of buoyant force, which is the upward force exerted by a fluid on an object submerged in it. The boat floats in the water, and the buoyant force is equal to the weight of the boat. The boat is made of a material that is less dense than water, so it floats. The buoyant force is equal to the weight of the boat, and the boat is in equilibrium.
