The Water Cycle

Water flows through various pathways on our planet, shaping landscapes and sustaining life. The amount of water on Earth always stays relatively the same – it just moves from one area of the Earth's surface or atmosphere to another. Have you ever wondered how water moves from oceans to clouds to rivers and back again? That journey, known as the water cycle or hydrologic cycle, is driven by two powerful forces: the energy of the Sun and the force of gravity.

Evaporation

The water cycle begins with the warmth of the Sun heating up bodies of water such as oceans, lakes, and rivers. This heat makes some of the liquid water turn into a gas called water vapor, rising into the air. This process is called evaporation. As water vapor is added to the air, it increases the atmosphere's moisture content, or humidity. Humidity is a measure of the amount of water vapor present in the air. Warmer air can hold more moisture than cooler air, so humidity levels tend to be higher in warm and tropical climates.

Sublimation

Sometimes, water vapor can enter the atmosphere directly from a solid object, such as ice, through a process called sublimation. This often happens in cold, dry climates where the sun is strong.

Precipitation

Clouds continue to build up as more and more water vapor condenses. Eventually, the cloud droplets or ice crystals grow large enough to overcome the upward air currents that keep them suspended in the atmosphere. When this happens, the droplets or crystals begin to fall from the cloud due to gravity. Depending on the temperature and the amount of water, such as rain, snow, sleet, or hail, this is called precipitation.

As water falls to the Earth's surface, it can collect in bodies of water or infiltrate the ground. The water that infiltrates the ground may fall as rain, where the ground is dry, or it may fall as snow, where the ground is frozen. In some conditions, the precipitation can freeze before reaching the ground. Other types of precipitation include sleet and hail, which forms when water droplets freeze together in the atmosphere.

Water that collects on the Earth's surface can evaporate back into the air, or it can flow into bodies of water or infiltrate the ground. This process is called runoff. Runoff can happen in many ways, such as temperature and humidity. For example, if the ground is dry, the water will evaporate. If the ground is frozen, the precipitation will freeze before reaching the ground. Other types of precipitation include sleet and hail, which forms when water droplets freeze together in the atmosphere.

Following the runoff, water can flow into bodies of water or infiltrate the ground. This is called infiltration. Infiltration is the process of water moving from the surface of the land into the ground. The rate of infiltration depends on the type of soil and the amount of water. For example, if the ground is dry, the water will infiltrate quickly. If the ground is saturated, the water will not infiltrate.

Water that infiltrates the ground can flow through the ground to bodies of water or back to the surface. This process is called groundwater flow. Groundwater flow can happen in many ways, such as temperature and humidity. For example, if the ground is dry, the water will infiltrate quickly. If the ground is saturated, the water will not infiltrate.

Water that flows back to the surface can evaporate back into the air, or it can flow into bodies of water or infiltrate the ground. This process is called runoff. Runoff can happen in many ways, such as temperature and humidity. For example, if the ground is dry, the water will evaporate. If the ground is frozen, the precipitation will freeze before reaching the ground. Other types of precipitation include sleet and hail, which forms when water droplets freeze together in the atmosphere.
