CAUTION

PLEASE READ CAREFULLY
BEFORE LEAVING YOUR MARK

1. The most basic cause of stress is the stressor itself. Stressors are events or situations that cause stress. They can be physical, chemical, or biological. For example, a physical stressor could be a loud noise, a chemical stressor could be a toxic substance, and a biological stressor could be a disease. Stressors can also be psychological, such as a conflict or a loss. The stressor is the first step in the stress response.
2. Once the stressor is perceived, the body's stress response is activated. This response is a series of physiological and psychological changes that help the body cope with the stressor. The stress response is controlled by the hypothalamus and the pituitary gland. The hypothalamus releases hormones that stimulate the pituitary gland to release hormones that stimulate the adrenal glands to release hormones that increase the heart rate, blood pressure, and blood sugar levels. These hormones also cause the release of stress hormones, such as cortisol, which can have a variety of effects on the body, including increasing the immune system and suppressing the immune system.
3. Stress can also be caused by chronic stressors, which are stressors that last for a long time. Chronic stressors can be physical, chemical, or biological, but they are usually psychological. Examples of chronic stressors include a long-term illness, a chronic pain, a chronic conflict, or a chronic loss. Chronic stressors can lead to a variety of health problems, including heart disease, high blood pressure, and depression.
4. Stress can also be caused by acute stressors, which are stressors that last for a short time. Acute stressors can be physical, chemical, or biological, but they are usually psychological. Examples of acute stressors include a sudden illness, a sudden pain, a sudden conflict, or a sudden loss. Acute stressors can lead to a variety of health problems, including heart disease, high blood pressure, and depression.
