Although ancient physicians including those from China and Ancient Greece believed in the value of physical activity for health, a diametrically opposite view has prevailed instead by the twentieth century. Since the first rigorous epidemiologic studies investigating physical inactivity and chronic disease risk have been conducted in the last century, a large body of evidence has clearly documented the many health benefits of physical activity; however, a large proportion of the world's population remains physically inactive. For this reason, this Research Topic aims to continue developing knowledge of the effects of physical inactivity on major non-communicable diseases and a better understanding of genetic, physiological, environmental, and behavioral factors which are convincingly related.
