

The Muscular System

100,000 skeletal muscles; 8. Physiology (the body)

Background

The Muscular System

The main function of the muscular system is movement. This includes walking, breathing, pumping the heart, contracting facial muscles, your digestive tract, just to name a few examples. Skeletal muscles are striated and they contract, helping to maintain a consistently temperature. Skeletal muscle makes up nearly half of an individual's bodyweight. Skeletal muscles are individual segments up of muscle fibers, myofibrils, sarcomeres, and composed of three fibers and three types of chemical fibers: skeletal, cardiac, and smooth.

Skeletal Muscles

Approximately 800 skeletal muscles are attached to bones by tendons.

Skeletal muscles contract voluntarily, meaning that you can control them.

Skeletal muscles work against the fulcrum point of the lever system. Antagonist muscles are called antagonists. Antagonist muscles are attached to the same point of origin. When they contract, they pull the attachment points toward the same direction.

Tendons are made up of extremely tough collagen fibers in the form of dense regular connective tissue. They attach to skeletal muscle fibers, connect them and are attached to bones on the other. Tendons have a high degree of tensile strength and are made of collagen. When laboratory skeletal muscles and their tendons are tested, the location, shape, and texture are important. The location is the area where the muscle is found, the shape is the point where the muscle contracts to a maximum force, and the texture is the point where the muscle contracts to a maximum force.

Cardiac Muscle

Cardiac muscle is only found in the heart and continuously contracts and relaxes to pump blood through the blood vessels of the body. Cardiac muscle contracts involuntarily, meaning that it cannot be controlled when they contract. The heart has a very specialized structure that allows for a continuous contraction of cardiac muscle. Cardiac muscle fibers are striated, branched, and have a high degree of electrical coupling. They have a high degree of electrical coupling, but they have a high degree of electrical coupling. These cells are called cardiac cells, which are found in the heart and are called cardiac cells. These cells are found in the heart and are called cardiac cells.
