

The Mammalian Cardiovascular System

The cardiovascular system is made up of a pump, the heart, and a system of interconnecting tubes, the blood vessels. The blood always remains within these vessels and so the system is known as a closed blood system.

- Blood is pumped out of the left ventricle into the aorta and travels from there to all parts of the body except the lungs.
 - It then returns to the right side of the heart in vena cava.
 - This is called systemic circulation
- The blood is pumped out of the right ventricle into the pulmonary arteries, which carry it to the lungs.
 - Final part of the journey is along the pulmonary veins, which return it to the left side of the heart
 - This is called the pulmonary circulation

BLOOD VESSELS

The vessels making up the blood system are of three main types.

1. Arteries carry blood AWAY from the heart
2. Veins carry blood TOWARDS the heart
3. Linking veins and arteries, taking blood to cells, are tiny vessels - capillaries.

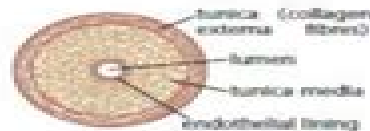

A. ARTERIES

The function of arteries is to transport blood, swiftly and at high pressure to tissues.

Structure of the wall enables it to perform this job sufficiently.

Have walls made up of three layers:

1. Inner endothelium (lining tissue), called tunica intima, - made up of a layer of flat cells called squamous epithelium, fitting together like jigsaw pieces.

- a. Layer is very smooth, minimising friction with the moving blood.
2. A middle layer called the tunica media containing smooth muscle, collagen and elastic fibres
3. An outer layer called tunica externa containing elastic fibres and collagen fibres.

- The distinctive characteristic of an artery are its strength and elasticity
- Blood leaving the heart is at a very high pressure. To withstand such pressure, artery walls must be extremely strong. This is achieved by:
 - Thickness and composition of the artery wall
- Arteries have the thickest walls of any blood vessel - aorta - largest artery has an overall diameter of 2.5 close to the heart.
- The tunica media, the thickest part of the wall, contains large amounts of elastic fibres allowing the wall to stretch as pulses of blood surge through at high pressure.
- Arteries further away from the heart have fewer elastic fibres in the tunica media but more muscles fibres.

= Elasticity in artery walls is important as it reduces the likelihood that they burst.

= BUT ALSO, elasticity has another function:

- Blood is pumped out of the heart in pulses, rushing out at HP as the ventricles contract and slowing as ventricles relax.
- The artery wall stretches as HP blood surges into them and then recoils inwards as pressure drops.
 - When HP blood surge in, artery becomes wider reducing pressure a little
 - When blood at LW enters artery, coils inward, raising pressure a little

Overall effect = even out flow of blood
