Landscape

Landscapes are made up of both natural and human-made features. Natural features include mountains, rivers, and forests. Human-made features include cities, roads, and farms.

Mountains are large landforms that rise above the surrounding land. They are often covered in snow and are home to many different types of plants and animals. Mountains can be formed by tectonic plates pushing together or by volcanic activity.

Rivers are bodies of water that flow in a channel. They are often formed by snowmelt or rain. Rivers can be used for transportation, irrigation, and recreation.

Forests are areas of land covered with trees. They are important for the environment because they provide oxygen and absorb carbon dioxide. Forests can be natural or planted.

Cities are human-made settlements. They are often located near rivers or coasts. Cities are important for the economy and for providing services to people.

Roads are human-made features that allow people to travel from one place to another. They are important for transportation and trade.

Farms are human-made features where crops are grown or animals are raised. They are important for food production.
