that the use of the word "sustainable" is not a goal in itself, but a means to an end. The end is a world where the needs of the present are met without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs. This is the only way to ensure a better future for all.

But we are actually working with our own experience of 1971, and consequently, comparing it to what we expect, regardless of how much the rate of inflation is, is not a very useful method. There is therefore, according to the Washington Post, a "tendency to overstate the inflation problem." Because of this, says the Post, "it is not surprising that the Federal Reserve has been able to keep the inflation rate down for the last 18 months." But the Post also says that the "inflation rate has been rising for the last 18 months." So, the Post is saying that the inflation rate has been rising for the last 18 months, but it is also saying that the inflation rate has been down for the last 18 months. This is a contradiction.

France's values are often summarized as respect for a secular, tolerant and democratic society, the right of individual freedom of conscience, human rights, equality of opportunity, the rule of law, and the right of free movement. In the event of an emergency, the police have the right to search homes and cars, and to stop and search people. In the event of an emergency using the police to the same extent as in non-emergency situations is not very much French. Having stated the above, we have to say that the general French attitude to the police is usually very positive, and that police officers are generally respected and obeyed. In emergency, officers will be courteous but firm. There is no French security force for a common specific emergency and possibly other forces that have more specific tasks. All thing apart, there are no common law forces. There are three national police forces: the Police Nationale, the Police Municipale and the Police Gendarmerie. The Police Nationale is not organized to provide organized protection of the individual citizen, but to provide organized protection of the state and the state's interests, and to provide organized protection of the individual citizen.
