Adjusting the Timing

There are three timing methods listed in this how-to. Read through them all and determine which method is best for you and your car. It is best to use a timing light (method 1), but the static timing methods can be just as effective.

Method 1

This how-to was originally posted on VWvortex.com by "Black_cabbie": <http://forums.vwvortex.com/showthread.php?p=1660562> (the VWvortex how-to contains an error which has been corrected in this how-to, seen in red).

Tools needed:

- Timing light
- Various wrenches
- Flathead screwdriver

The camshaft pulley has 2 important marks on it: A little notch on the engine side and an OT mark on the other side.

The flywheel has 2 marks as well: One V-shaped notch showing 6° BTDC (Before Top Dead Center) and a little circle showing TDC (Top Dead Center).

The distributor has a notch to where the rotor should be aligned.

Step 1

Remove the timing hole plug (big, round green or white thing) on the transmission.

Remove the spark plugs and distributor cap.

Step 2

Turn the engine By HAND (i.e., use a wrench on the crankshaft bolt) until you see this mark on the flywheel.

The little O mark (white arrow) on the flywheel is the TDC mark. It means the #1 piston is in the TDC position and both inlet and outlet valves are closed (maximum compression in the chamber); that means that the spark plug is supposed to fire when the piston is at that point. The 6° BTDC mark is indicated by the yellow arrow.

(Note)

If you are not sure about the flywheel, insert a long screwdriver into the #1 cylinder through the spark plug hole and, while slowly turning the engine, check to see if the screwdriver is moving. That will give you an idea if the piston is at TDC.

(The picture above shows a flywheel timing lug, which is used with a special Volkswagen timing tool; this is not a BTDC mark).
