

Ama Ata Aidoo: Our Sister Killjoy

Megan Behrent, Brown University

In Our Sister Killjoy or Reflections from a Black-eyed Squint, published in 1977 (although it was written almost a decade earlier), Aidoo portrays a young Ghanaian female student who travels from Ghana to Germany and England and then returns to Ghana. The narrative, which is a mixture of prose and poetry, depicts the experiences and thoughts of Sissie, the black-eyed squint whose vision of the world is shaped by her constant awareness of the problems of Africa and in particular, neocolonialism and the corruption and hypocrisy of the African elite. Sissie in her travels and interactions with other people "[f]orever carr[ies] Africa's problems on her shoulders" (p.118), and through her travels Europe she is able to point to many of the problems of her society and its relation to the Western developed world. In this sense she is typical of the character of the 'been-to' as a tool of social analysis albeit it in a reverse manner in that it is not so much her experience in the Western developed world which upon her return shapes her view of African society but rather her conscious identification as an African in Europe that shapes her world view. In fact, much of the novel is a bitter critique of the educated elite, in particular the 'been-to's, and the prestige and admiration that is associated with the Western developed countries and those Africans who are privileged enough to emigrate there.

The novel begins with an indictment of the educated classes of Ghanaian society, critiquing in particular what Aidoo calls the "moderates" who ignore the real problems that the society faces and instead subordinate the interests of the majority of people to those of the "bosses" and foreign domination, upholding "[t]he sanctity of the U.N. charter", enforcing "law and order" and blaming all the problems on "population explosion" (p.6). Likewise Aidoo critiques the intellectuals of Ghana saying, "It [the academic-pseudo-intellectual] is even more dangerous, who in face of reality that is more tangible than the massive walls of the slave forts standing along our beaches, still talks of universal truth, universal art, universal literature and the Gross National Product." (p.6). Aidoo thus, condemns the educated elite of Ghana, who in the face of drastic material conditions for the majority of people offer an empty rhetoric of national development which does not address the needs of the country and only serves to maintain the current system of corruption, inequality, and neocolonial subservience.

Aidoo also critiques the continued glorification of all things Western, no doubt a legacy of colonialism and a symptom of what she argues is the continued neocolonialist ideology that pervades Ghanaian society. In particular, she denounces the ideology which is perhaps at the root of the problem of emigration from Africa which posits Europe and the West as an ideal to which all Africans should aspire. Traveling to Europe becomes the ultimate sign of success. As Sissie notes her trip to Europe is discussed as if "...somehow, going to Europe was altogether more like a dress rehearsal for a journey to paradise." (p.9) and it becomes a sign that "Our Sister had made it." (p.9). Aidoo satirizes this idealization of Europe and immediately contrasts it with the reality of racism and poverty that await the majority of Africans who emigrate to these 'promised lands.' Aidoo sets out essentially to debunk the myths that abound in the

Gateward,John Jennings,2015-07-16 When many think of comic books the first thing that comes to mind are caped crusaders and spandex wearing super heroes Perhaps inevitably these images are of white men and more rarely women It was not until the 1970s that African American superheroes such as Luke Cage Blade and others emerged But as this exciting new collection reveals these superhero comics are only one small component in a wealth of representations of black characters within comic strips comic books and graphic novels over the past century The Blacker the Ink is the first book to explore not only the diverse range of black characters in comics but also the multitude of ways that black artists writers and publishers have made a mark on the industry Organized thematically into panels in tribute to sequential art published in the funny pages of newspapers the fifteen original essays take us on a journey that reaches from the African American newspaper comics of the 1930s to the Francophone graphic novels of the 2000s Even as it demonstrates the wide spectrum of images of African Americans in comics and sequential art the collection also identifies common character types and themes running through everything from the strip The Boondocks to the graphic novel Nat Turner Though it does not shy away from examining the legacy of racial stereotypes in comics and racial biases in the industry The Blacker the Ink also offers inspiring stories of trailblazing African American artists and writers Whether you are a diehard comic book fan or a casual reader of the funny pages these essays will give you a new appreciation for how black characters and creators have brought a vibrant splash of color to the world of comics Book Review Digest ,2001 Binding Cultures Gay Wilentz,1992-05-22

Wilentz makes convincing arguments for the connections between African and Afro American women's culture. Nellie McKay Wilentz's jargon-free intelligent discussion will appeal to students in African American and women's literature courses as well as general readers interested in the emerging field. Choice Through these works Wilentz demonstrates the powerful transformation possible through understanding and embracing the past even if that past includes oppression and brutalization. Belles Lettres Binding Cultures investigates the cultural bonds between African and African American women writers such as Nigerian Flora Nwapa and Ghanaians Efua Sutherland and Ama Ata Aidoo writers who focus on the role of women in passing on cultural values to future generations and African American writers Alice Walker Toni Morrison and Paule Marshall who self-consciously evoke African culture to help create a more integrated African American community.
