

COLLOID

Colloids are mixtures whose particles are larger than the size of a molecule but smaller than particles that can be seen with the naked eye. Colloids are one of three major types of mixtures, the other two being solutions and suspensions.

MILK

Milk is a colloid, with tiny globules of butterfat distributed evenly throughout the liquid.

JAM

Jam is a type of colloid. Small particles of sweet fruit are suspended in water and pectin, which creates a sweet sticky treat.

MAYONNAISE

Mayonnaise is an emulsion, which is a mixture of two liquids that normally can't be combined. Mayonnaise is made by combining vinegar with egg yolk. Eggs (containing fat emulsifier lecithin) bind the ingredients together and prevent separation. An emulsion is a colloidal dispersion of a liquid in either a liquid or a solid. Chemically, emulsions are colloids.

SUSPENSION

A suspension is a heterogeneous mixture of two or more substances. Particles are suspended throughout the medium in bulk and can be easily seen by naked eyes. Particles settle and separate within a few minutes or hours.

MUDDY WATER

Mud suspended in water. Suspensions like this can be easily broken. The solids have not fully dissolved.

OIL AND VINEGAR

Oil and vinegar are a solid dissolving in a liquid. They do not form a solution but rather a mixture of two liquids that will separate over time.

FLOUR AND WATER

Flour in water, like other liquids that need to be shaken well before using. Flour does not dissolve in water as thousands of starch granules, proteins and lipids that are all insoluble in water. Flour does not form a solution. Instead of dissolving in water, flour will absorb water to form a sticky suspension.
