Frontiers of Fear Ariane Chebel d'Appollonia, 2012-03-15 On both sides of the Atlantic restrictive immigration policies have been framed as security imperatives since the 1990s This trend accelerated in the aftermath of 9 11 and subsequent terrorist attacks in Europe In Frontiers of Fear Ariane Chebel d'Appollonia raises two central questions with profound consequences for national security and immigration policy First does the securitization of immigration issues actually contribute to the enhancement of internal security Second does the use of counterterrorist measures address such immigration issues as the increasing number of illegal immigrants the resilience of ethnic tensions and the emergence of homegrown radicalization Chebel d'Appollonia questions the main assumptions that inform political agendas in the United States and throughout Europe analyzing implementation and evaluating the effectiveness of policies in terms of their stated objectives She argues that the new security based immigration regime has proven ineffective in achieving its prescribed goals and even aggravated the problems it was supposed to solve A security insecurity cycle has been created that results in less security and less democracy The excesses of securitization have harmed both immigration and counterterrorist policies and seriously damaged the delicate balance between security and respect for civil liberties American Journal of Islamic Social Sciences 21:3 Christopher Allen,Tahir Abbas,Halil Ibrahim Yenigun,Nancy Gallagher,Nancy L. Former Muslims in Europe Maria Vlieg, 2021-07-21 Within contemporary Western European academic media and socio political spheres Muslims are predominantly seen through the lens of increased religiosity This religiosity is often seen as problematic especially in the context of securitised discourses of Islamist terrorism Yet there are clear indications that a growing number of people who grew up in Muslim families no longer subscribe to Islam or call themselves religious at all Drawing on fieldwork in the UK and the Netherlands this study examines the experiences of people moving out of Islam It rigorously questions the antagonistic nature of the debate between the religious and the secular or who is in and who is out and argues for recognition of the ambiguity that most of us live in Revealing many complex forms of moving out this study adds much needed nuance to understandings of secularity and Muslim identities in Europe
