

Welding Principles and Applications 7th Edition Chapter 3

Welding is a manufacturing or fabrication process that joins materials, usually metals or thermo-plastics, by causing them coalesce. This is done using heat, pressure, or a combination thereof. Sometimes, the welding process also consumes a filling material to join the parts. Welding is a permanent process, and the welded joint is usually stronger than the parts being joined. However, some welding techniques for plastics are reversible, meaning that the welded joint can be broken apart without damaging the parts. Welding is a fundamental part of manufacturing and construction. It is used to join metals and plastics into structures that are stronger than the parts being joined. Welding is also used to repair damaged structures. It is a fundamental part of manufacturing and construction.
