Background

The Muscular System

The major function of the muscular system is movement - the contracting (squeezing, pulling, pushing) of tissues, accomplishing functions ranging from digestion (peristalsis) to heart pumping (myocardium). Muscles also create heat (they generate energy for movement as metabolic byproducts). Skeletal muscle (voluntary) mostly built of unbranched, striated skeletal myofibers. Flank muscle is an individual, unbranched type of striated muscle (myofiber, myofibril, sarcomere) found in vertebrates. There are three types of muscle tissue: skeletal, cardiac, and smooth.

Skeletal Muscle

Skeletal muscle cells (myofibrils) are attached to bony structures.

Skeletal muscles contract voluntarily, responding to signals from somatic motor neurons.

Characteristics: Skeletal muscle cells appear as long cylindrical fibers (myofibrils), striated, tapered, and multinucleated. Most skeletal muscles are attached to two bony (or cartilage) points. When they contract, they pull the attachment points closer to one another.

Myofibrils are made up of alternatingly tough collagen fibers in the form of dense regular connective tissue. They consist of skeletal muscle fibers, which are surrounded by some connective tissue. Myofibrils are made up of repeating units of sarcomeres, which are the basic units of contraction. The myofibrils are made up of repeating units of sarcomeres, which are the basic units of contraction. The myofibrils are made up of repeating units of sarcomeres, which are the basic units of contraction. The myofibrils are made up of repeating units of sarcomeres, which are the basic units of contraction.

Cardiac Muscle

Cardiac muscle is only found in the heart and is characterized by striations and branching. It is found throughout the heart, especially in the myocardium. Cardiac muscle is characterized by its branching nature, which allows it to contract as a syncytium. The heart has its own pacemaker, the sinoatrial node, which controls the rate of contraction. Cardiac muscle is found in the heart, and it is the only muscle that is striated and branched. It is also the only muscle that is found in the heart and is characterized by its branching nature.

Smooth Muscle

Smooth muscle, also known as involuntary muscle, is the muscle of the internal organs. It is found in the walls of the digestive tract, the respiratory tract, the urinary tract, and the reproductive system. Smooth muscle is characterized by its lack of striations and its ability to contract without conscious control. It is found in the walls of the digestive tract, the respiratory tract, the urinary tract, and the reproductive system. Smooth muscle is characterized by its lack of striations and its ability to contract without conscious control.
